MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

SUBJECT: Travel and Transportation Benefits upon Termination under the CIA Act of 1949 and the Foreign Service Act

1. Statutory language of the CIA Act of 1949 and the Foreign Service Act indicates only two differences in benefits a person is entitled to for travel and transportation expenses upon termination. The first difference is that CIA benefits are payable only to persons retiring from duty stations outside the several states of the United States but excluding Alaska and Hawaii. Under the Foreign Service Act travel and transportation benefits may be paid regardless of the duty station.

2. The other difference concerns payment for the transportation of furniture, household and personal effects upon termination. Under the Foreign Service Act one is paid these expenses for shipment to the place where he will reside. Under the CIA Act one is paid these expenses only to the place of residence at the time of appointment or to a point not more distant upon termination, unless such termination is retirement and then the expenses are paid to the place where one will reside.

3. All other provisions of these two statutes concerning termination, travel and transportation benefits are identical.
